Summary

Andy Burnham was formally appointed prime minister by King Charles at Buckingham Palace on the afternoon of Monday 20 July 2026, succeeding Keir Starmer, who resigned as Labour leader the previous month. In his first address outside No 10, Burnham promised to "make this moment a circuit breaker for Britain" and deliver "the biggest changes in the last 40 years." His first cabinet represents a sweeping clear-out of ministers closely associated with the Starmer government, returning several "soft left" figures and allies to the top table. The reshuffle was still being updated as further appointments were announced at time of writing.
